What inspired you to write this book?

It's victims I'm interested in, as in victims of crime, rather than those who commit crimes or those who catch them. It's one of the main reasons why, when I wanted to write cop novels, I created cops who don't actually catch criminals or even investigate crimes. They're protectors rather than persecutors. This novel is much more about the impact of crime on the victims than crime itself.

Tell us a little about the story you've created.

Shelter Me, like the two earlier novels in this trilogy, Gimme Shelter and Secret Shelter is set in the hidden world of witness protection. Over three thousand people a year are taken into this twilight world in which everything they've previously taken for granted – who they are, their life history, their friends and family – is suddenly taken away from them. Sometimes at a moment's notice they're plunged from a world that's safe and familiar to a totally alien world instead. The Shelter series focuses as much on the psychological implications of that as the crime that provoked it.

What do you hope readers will take away from this story?

An enjoyment of the narrative, a fascination with a new and hidden world and, above all, an internal debate. What would I do if faced with this sudden fracture in everything I've known in my life up to now? How would I cope?
